

nurturing life, promoting vitality

J.F. Hellio - Van Ingen/FIBA

The future is not something you predict and wait for. It is something you invent daily through your actions.

REBECCA SOLNIT

As we look back at 2006, it is difficult not to feel despair with the deepening militarism and violence that haunt the planet. The world seems caught in a politics of death from which there is no respite.

In Burma, at least 20,000 people were displaced by the military campaign in Karen State over the past year, fleeing a vicious military junta determined to exterminate all those who harbour such dangerous thoughts as human rights and democracy. In Sudan, the bloodbath continued, the international community apparently paralyzed and unable to take effective measures to stop the genocide.

In the Middle East, the fighting between Israel and Hezbollah took more than a thousand lives, mostly Lebanese civilians, and created one million refugees. The carnage continued in Iraq, with an estimated death toll of over 650,000. The invasion has destroyed many lives, and the deaths continue to mount as the country descends into civil war. In Afghanistan, the UN estimates that more than 20,000 civilians have died since the invasion. Two decades after millions of Afghans were displaced, maimed or killed during the invasion by the Soviet Union, the people of Afghanistan once again are seeing their country slide towards an abyss of despair and death.

These were among the horrors of the past year. Human life is being debased by despots, dictators and fundamentalists of all types.

And yet, in villages, towns and cities throughout the world, people are repudiating this politics of death. Instead, they are promoting a politics of life, a politics that asserts that all people have the right to live in freedom and dignity without fear of violence.

This is a politics that maintains that we all have the right to live in communities where our children can be healthy and secure and achieve their full potential. This is a politics that celebrates life, and nourishes those things that make life worth living.

Inter Pares is privileged to work with people around the world who have committed themselves to nurturing this politics of life. In refugee camps in Thailand, in conflict zones in Colombia, in the slums of major cities like Managua and Manila, people are working to provide health and nutrition programs, to develop educational activities for children, to organize communities to assert their rights. People are reaching out to promote reconciliation in areas of conflict, and to counsel and support victims of torture. Citizens are insisting on accountable governance, and the development of social and economic policies that benefit the many, not the few. People are demanding an end to the violence and militarism that have shattered so many lives.

Women from places such as Sudan, Burma, Peru, Mexico and Guatemala are challenging the abuse and brutality they have experienced at the hands of armed actors. In Ghana and other parts of Africa, citizens' groups are insisting that multinational corporations, including those from Canada, follow strict environmental and social responsibility guidelines. In Guinea-Bissau, people are organizing to protect fragile coastal areas. In Burma, backpack health workers are trekking into dangerous war zones to provide desperately needed health services. People are working for change everywhere, and this movement is building.

This movement for change is more than a renunciation of the politics of death. It is a celebration of what we can become when we join hands to work towards a common vision of the future.

Transforming this vision into reality requires commitment, and often courage. And it requires all who embrace this vision to act. The future, as Rebecca Solnit reminds us, is something we invent daily through our actions.

Throughout the past year, Inter Pares supported the actions of citizens' groups in Asia, Africa, Canada and the Americas engaged in creating their visions of the future. It has been a privilege to work with and help nourish the efforts of so many talented and courageous people. And many Canadians have acted with us, contributing to sustaining and celebrating life in its fullness. For your support we are very grateful.

This Annual Report provides some examples of the actions during the past year that nurture and reinvent the politics of life, today and into the future.

People
are repudiating
this politics of death.
Instead, they are promoting a politics of life... a politics
that celebrates and nourishes those things that make life worth living.

nurturing a politics of life: how we do what we do

Inter Pares collaborates with people in Canada and in over twenty countries to promote peace, democracy and sustainable livelihoods. We do this through the depth and intimacy of our relationships with our colleagues, people of integrity and courage who have built organizations, movements and networks based on social justice values that we share. With them, we discuss, analyze and plan our work together. And with them, we nurture new organizations, build coalitions, create knowledge, educate for change and generate the resources necessary for action. Here are a few examples of how Inter Pares celebrates and nourishes a politics of life, inventing the future daily through our actions with colleagues around the world.

Steve Hunt

uniting for action

When people come together on the basis of shared values and a united commitment to work for change, the impact is almost always more far-reaching, creative and effective than what we can do alone. For these reasons, a key strategy of Inter Pares and our counterparts is to help build and sustain coalitions, both internationally and in Canada.

The Burma Relief Centre (BRC) nurtures coalitions among civil society groups on Burma's borders to facilitate common strategies and promote understanding and trust among diverse and historically isolated communities. With Inter Pares' financial, political and programmatic support, BRC promotes initiatives that bring together people of different ethnic backgrounds and people who work in different sectors. One such initiative is the Shwe Gas Movement (SGM), a broad coalition of individuals and groups based in Burma, Thailand, Bangladesh and India, who are concerned about the social and environmental impact of a proposed gas pipeline through Burma to Asian markets. Such a pipeline would also provide enormous revenues to Burma's corrupt and repressive military junta. In 2006, SGM published Supply and Command, a major report that brought significant international attention to the threat on people's lives, livelihoods, health and environment posed by the pipeline. The coalition also worked with Indian activists to publicize and question the Indian government's plans to purchase gas supplies from Burma.

In Canada, Inter Pares continued to participate in the International Civil Liberties Monitoring Group, a coalition of 38 Canadian organizations monitoring government policies and practices that undermine civil liberties, human rights, and the rights of refugees and migrants in the context of the "war on terror". Co-founded by Inter Pares in 2002, the ICLMG was an official intervenor in the Commission of Inquiry in the case of Maher Arar in 2006. The Commission's report, released in the Fall of 2006, included the ICLMG's recommendations to exonerate Mr. Arar, to recommend further investigation into the cases of other Canadian citizens detained and tortured in Syria, and to establish civilian oversight of all Canadian agencies involved in national security operations.

learning and knowledge for action

The struggle to eradicate entrenched inequalities and injustice in Canada and around the world requires constant innovation and fresh ideas. Inter Pares creates opportunities for people to come together to think "outside the box," develop new ideas and strategies, and form relationships of common cause.

In September 2006, Inter Pares brought together 22 people from Canada and around the world to examine the global trend in state policies that control and contain the movement of vulnerable people. Recognizing the contribution migration makes to who we are and who we will become – in the North and global South – participants considered strategies to counteract and transform the pervasive politics of fear that runs through the migration debate. The report from this learning circle, Out of the Shadowlands, is available on Inter Pares' Web site, along with the Inter Pares Occasional Paper The Boundaries of Belonging: Reflections on Migration Policies into the 21st Century.

In Peru in August 2006, Inter Pares counterpart Project Counselling Service organized an international legal seminar on the use of sexual violence as a weapon of war. The seminar brought together women's groups from Peru, Guatemala and Colombia, international legal experts, and members of the Peruvian judicial system, to develop legal tools for prosecuting cases of war-related sexual violence in national and international courts. Participants emphasized the importance of providing appropriate psychological support to women giving testimony, to ensure that the legal process does not re-victimize them. All involved agreed that women survivors themselves need to be at the centre of their own cases, as engaged actors, with accompaniment from lawyers and psychologists. Given ongoing political turmoil in these countries, participants agreed to work together to assure the safety and security of women witnesses, as well as lawyers and judges.

In 2006, Tiniguena, a leading environmental organization in Guinea-Bissau, organized its third annual youth forum on the Bijagos islands, which brought together hundreds of young women and men to develop plans to conserve the delicate biodiversity of the area. Participants worked together to incorporate new conservation ideas while keeping alive the cultural practices that are in balance with the archipelago ecosystem. Following the forum, local youth organized an exhibition showcasing current Bijagos handicrafts and art, reminders of a deeply rooted and ever vibrant culture.

Generating resources to support social justice action is an integral part of Inter Pares' work. We have learned through experience that modest amounts of money, used strategically and wisely, can help people to strengthen their own organizations and nurture creative initiatives for change. We describe some of those organizations and their courageous work in this report and in our Bulletin throughout the year.

By nurturing relationships of common cause and solidarity with counterpart organizations around the world, Inter Pares provides an opportunity for Canadians to make a difference. Through their donations, Canadians make an enduring contribution to dynamic, life-sustaining action in diverse places and circumstances. As one of Inter Pares' supporters in Calgary told us, "It is true that these are troubled times, when hope is often hard to see. But contributing in spirit and joining in solidarity with those who articulate a shared vision is a tonic and a source of hope."

This demonstration of support from thousands of Canadians allows Inter Pares to raise funds from private foundations and the Canadian government. Inter Pares engages with these institutional funders, such as the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) and the International Development Research Centre (IDRC), to inform and improve public policy. We draw on our experience and understanding of issues that concern us all – gender equality, human rights, environmental stewardship, economic justice, democratic development – to advocate for change in the policies of our own government that affect the lives of people in Canada and elsewhere. In this way, the value of the initial financial contribution to a single organization or program can have a lasting positive impact beyond the borders of a local community.

organizing for social change

Over the course of 31 years, Inter Pares has helped establish and accompany scores of organizations that have become leading voices for social justice around the world. Inter Pares provides seed funding to develop new organizations. And Inter Pares staff participate as advisors, steering committee or Board members in the stewardship of organizations and in the day-to-day accompaniment of groups and individuals who dare to dream of a better world.

In 1999, in response to alarming reports of human rights abuses and environmental damage caused by Canadian mining companies, Inter Pares joined human rights, aboriginal, and environmental organizations in pooling resources to create the organization MiningWatch Canada (MWC). Inter Pares remains a proud member of MWC, and an Inter Pares staff person sits on its Board. Today, MWC has become a key resource for citizens who want to ensure the respect of human rights and the integrity of communities and the environment where mining occurs. In 2006, MWC played a crucial role in the joint industry and civil society Advisory Group to the Canadian government's national roundtables on Corporate Social Responsibility and the Canadian Extractive Sector in Developing Countries. The roundtables reviewed mechanisms to hold Canadian oil and mining companies accountable in Canada for environmental damage and human rights violations in developing countries. The Advisory Group's report and recommendations will be tabled in Parliament in early 2007.

For the past decade, Inter Pares has collaborated with organizations internationally and across Canada concerned with the spread of genetically modified organisms. In October 2006, Inter Pares helped create the Canadian Biotechnology Action Network, an alliance of over twenty groups from across the country working for food sovereignty and biodiversity conservation. Inter Pares also facilitated the participation of a member of the National Farmers Union in an international training course on biosafety and genetic engineering. The knowledge gained at this course is informing our common understanding and analysis of the risks posed by the application of genetic engineering in agriculture.

Education nurtures and promotes public understanding of social justice dilemmas, and encourages personal and collective action for change. Education is at the heart of vibrant social movements. In 2006, Inter Pares and our counterparts organized public fora, researched and wrote articles and opinion pieces, and participated in parliamentary hearings, contributing our analysis to debates on social justice and policy change.

In March 2006, in conjunction with other organizations, Inter Pares organized a public forum entitled Terminator on Trial. This event attracted nearly a thousand participants who were interested in learning more about Terminator technology – a technology that renders seeds sterile, making it impossible for farmers to save their seeds. Thousands of Canadians joined citizens worldwide to demand that our government support the United Nations moratorium on Terminator technology. As a direct result, the moratorium on Terminator was upheld and strengthened.

During the year, Inter Pares researched and documented Canada Pension Plan (CPP) investments in companies involved in conflict areas overseas. This resulted in the launch of a national public education campaign about the lack of socially responsible criteria for CPP investments. Inter Pares and several other national organizations urged Canadians to write to provincial and federal members of Parliament to raise these concerns. In response to these efforts, officials of the CPP Investment Board have engaged in discussions with civil society, and have signaled their willingness to collaborate in promoting corporate social responsibility.

The Inter Pares Web site is increasingly being used by students and activists, in Canada and internationally, as a source of information about social justice issues. In 2006, Inter Pares published short articles about our work, and launched a photo essay, The Price of Gold, on the social and ecological impact of gold mining in Ghana. We also released two papers on migration, Out of the Shadowlands and The Boundaries of Belonging, and posted a short video of the Back Pack Health Worker Team, filmed by the health workers themselves inside Burma. These pieces have been widely disseminated and re-published by other organizations. All of these materials are available at www.interpares.ca.

Auditor's Report to the Members, Inter Pares

We have audited the statement of financial position of Inter Pares as at December 31, 2006 and the statement of revenue and expense and changes in fund balances for the year then ended. These financial statements are the responsibility of the organization's management. Our responsibility is to express an opinion on these financial statements based on our audit.

We conducted our audit in accordance with Canadian generally accepted auditing standards. Those standards require that we plan and perform an audit to obtain reasonable assurance whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation.

In our opinion, these financial statements present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the organization as at December 31, 2006 and the results of its operations and its cash flows for the year then ended in accordance with Canadian generally accepted accounting principles.

Notes to Financial Statements December 31, 2006

1. SIGNIFICANT ACCOUNTING POLICIES

(a) Organization Inter Pares works overseas and in Canada in support of self-help development groups, and in the promotion of understanding about the causes, effects and solutions to under-development and poverty. Inter Pares was incorporated without share capital under Part II of the Canada Business Corporations Act. The Corporation is a registered charity under Section 149(1)(c) of the Income Tax Act and as a result is not subject to income taxes.

(b) Revenue recognition Inter Pares follows the deferral method of accounting for contributions. Restricted contributions are recognized as revenue in the year in which the related expenses are incurred. Funds received from CIDA for overseas programs are recorded as program advances when sent overseas, and are subsequently recorded as expense when amounts are spent by overseas partners. Donations are recorded as revenue when received.

(c) Investments Investments consist primarily of government bonds and other loans receivable and are recorded at cost which approximates market value.

(d) Capital assets Capital assets are recorded at cost. Amortization is provided on a straight line basis over 5 years for office equipment. Computer equipment is amortized 50% in the first year and 25% in the remaining 2 years. The building is amortized on a straight line basis over 40 years.

(e) Use of estimates The preparation of these financial statements in conformity with Canadian generally accepted accounting principles requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect the reported amounts of assets and liabilities and disclosure of contingent assets and liabilities at the date of the financial statements and the reported amounts of revenues and expenses during the reporting period. Actual results could differ from those estimates.

2. CAPITAL ASSETS

	Cost	Accumulated Depreciation	2006 Net	2005 Net
Land	$ 200,000	$ —	$ 200,000	$ 200,000
Building	582,230	66,500	515,730	530,480
Computer and office equipment	125,842	110,987	14,855	21,929
	$ 908,072	$ 177,487	$ 730,585	$ 752,409

During the year, depreciation of capital assets amounted to $32,579 (2005 - $41,703).

3. PROGRAM ADVANCES AND DEFERRED REVENUE Program advances can vary significantly from year to year depending on the timing of funds sent overseas and the reporting back by overseas counterparts. Deferred revenue consists mainly of revenue related to unspent overseas program advances.

	2006	2005
4. MORTGAGE PAYABLE
Royal Bank of Canada - mortgage payable at $3,945 monthly including interest at 7.75%, due July 1, 2007, secured by 221 Laurier Avenue East	$ 150,859	$ 231,060
Less current portion	150,859	30,778
	$ —	$ 200,282

5. BEQUEST FUND During fiscal year 2004 a bequest fund was established. Bequests received are recorded as revenue in this fund. During the year $nil (2005 - $18,149) was transferred from this fund to unrestricted net assets.

6. RESERVE FUND Inter Pares maintains an unrestricted operational reserve to assure that obligations are honoured in the event of unanticipated changes in external funding. During the year, $100,000 (2005 - $nil) was transferred from unrestricted net assets to the reserve fund.

7. ENDOWMENT FUND The Margaret Fleming McKay Endowment Fund receives gifts whose principal is invested and held for a minimum of ten years. In addition to such externally restricted gifts, the Endowment Fund contains transfers from Inter Pares which are subject to the same restrictions. As at the year end, the Endowment Fund includes $76,600 (2005 - $76,600) in externally restricted gifts.

WHAT IS INTER PARES?

Inter Pares is a Canadian social justice organization working in Canada and around the world to create understanding about the causes and effects of poverty and injustice, and to support actions that lead to positive social and economic change.

Inter Pares collaborates with social change organizations that share our analysis that poverty and injustice are caused by inequalities within and between nations, and who are working to promote social and economic justice in their communities and societies.

Inter Pares – the name means “among equals” – was founded in 1975 to practice a new form of international cooperation, conceived not as charity but as profound solidarity. Inter Pares’ work is grounded in the belief that we and our counterparts are equals, working in common cause to confront injustice and to promote more sustainable models of human community and interaction in the world we share. The name Inter Pares also describes how we work internally. Inter Pares staff form a cooperative management team working on the principle of parity – parity of salary and parity of responsibility.

Inter Pares is a registered Canadian charity supported through the generous donations of almost 10,000 Canadians. In our approach to the public, rather than spending resources on large fundraising campaigns, we have chosen to develop a solid core of committed supporters over time. This strategy has not made Inter Pares a household name, but reflects the type of commitment our supporters and counterparts expect of us.

INTER PARES’ SUPPORTERS

Inter Pares’ social justice work is an expression of values shared by most Canadians – of one standard of dignity and equality for all, of international cooperation and solidarity. For over thirty years, thousands of Canadians have expressed these values through financial contributions to Inter Pares. Without this support, our work would not be possible.

The generosity of Inter Pares’ supporters extends beyond immediate financial assistance. Many contributors have introduced us to their friends, made gifts in honour of special occasions, and hosted gatherings with us in their homes. We have also been honoured by those who have helped us build a legacy for the future by leaving Inter Pares a bequest in their will.

Inter Pares is also grateful to our institutional donors, including the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) and the International Development Research Centre (IDRC); many foundations, union locals, and religious communities; various organizations that contribute through their solidarity funds; and businesses that support their employees’ philanthropy through matching gifts.

As the political and economic context of our work changes, increasing our financial independence will help assure our political autonomy and our ability to carry out progressive programs to bring about social change. Our individual donors are integral to the sustainability of our work.

For more information on our fundraising, including the many ways in which you can support our work, please visit our Web site at www.interpares.ca or contact us directly.
